Text: Strategic Management: Text and Cases - Dess, McNamara, and Eisner, 9th Edition.
The Publisher is McGraw Hill, ISBN-13: 978-1259813955

Course Purpose:

Some firms outperform others despite very similar opportunities and risks. When the business environment is dismal, certain corporations remain profitable while others fail. Good policy and strategy explain some of this phenomenon. Together, we will endeavor to examine strategic analysis, formulation, and implementation to improve our performance and value in today's business world. I spent nearly 40 years in the business world. My goal is to share the experience with you and help improve your personal value to your prospective future organization.

Background:

Strategic management is a required course of all students graduating from major business schools around the world. It requires you to learn to integrate the material such as organizational management, human resource management, leadership, economics, accounting, financial management, production, information systems, marketing, and business ethics, which you have been exposed to the past few years. This course equips you with tools and techniques to apply and see how each of these very different disciplines come together.

Ethics:

You should author your own work and give credit when quoting the work of others. Your thoughts and writing may be better than others. Test taking means NEVER seeking unauthorized assistance. Plagiarism and cheating are abhorred and will provide sufficient grounds for dismissal and failing the class. Make sure to reference your sources (APA in preferred).
